7. SUBJECT SPECIFICATIONS

7.1 Purpose of the Subject

Work Integrated Learning (WIL) in this context refers to learning in a workplace as part of a formally structured programme. It can occur within industry, NGOs and other placements in accordance with the demands of a profession or qualification. A learner will be able to integrate specific skills and knowledge with personal and professional values and critical generic learning skills to demonstrate competence in Project Presentation 3. This competence will allow learners to pull together various pieces of learning within a specified context; demonstrate their ability to integrate learning and performance; evaluate both, and to identify support or further learning required. This subject allows the IT department to create innovative spaces in which students are encouraged and guided in practising their newly learned competence.
