

[00:00:07.090] - Speaker 1

To begin with. Ms. Abrahams, if you could possibly could you take us from the beginning how the program process begins?

[00:00:23.590] - Speaker 2

Okay, so the process begins with students generally submitting their CVS to the graduate recruitment email address. There's no particular format of the CV, so they can submit it. They must be this and that completed. It's just up to them how they submit their CV. I then have to save that CV. At the moment, I'm saving it in a folder and converting it to a PDF file and saving it in a folder so that when the company contacts me, I then will look through all my lips, for example, use it. I will look through all my CVs if it's a request for IT students, and I will forward CVS to the company. They will then take the process further themselves. So I will save the CV. Once the CV is saved, I will then go and manually write down all the students information or graduate's information such as name, surname, contact details, qualification, et cetera. Then I need to go and then in an Excel sheet, I then have all my IT students when they submitted their CV, their names, contact details, residential area qualifications, and so on and so on. Once I've manually written that out, I go and fill it in, and then I have to save it on Excel.

[00:02:14.930] - Speaker 2

And then, as I said, when a company contacts me, I will go through my database based on the company's request, and I will then attach those fees to the company, who then makes ultimately the final decision on who they recruit or if they recruit any students based on the CVS that I sent to them. So that is the process.

[00:02:45.250] - Speaker 1

Thank you. Miss Abraham's, are there any questions from the students?

[00:03:02.750] - Speaker 2

Sorry, I did neglect to inform that once the CV has been received and it's been saved or on the database, I then acknowledge the CV to the student. So the student or graduate would get an email stating that hereby have received your CV. Can I read through the following document, which would generally be a document explaining that I keep your CV on record for three months. After three months, you need to let me know that you're still unemployed and looking, or if you update your CV, please resubmit it. That's normally an email along with puppy at consent form that they generally get from me, which they need to return to me, and if they have any updated information, they need to forward an updated CV. That email is gentle in an acknowledgment of having received their CV. And the reason why I keep it for three months is because the graduate recruitment program is aimed at recent unemployed graduates. Recent meaning within the last two years of graduating. We are not a recruitment agency. We are there to assist our students generally with entry level positions. The assumption is that after two years, you would have some meaningful employment within your industry, should you not?

[00:04:46.780] - Speaker 2

So let's say, for example, you graduated in 2021 and you haven't really found employment in your industry. You basically studied marketing, but now you are a cashier at Shop, right? Then we will continue to keep your CV on record if you indicate after three months that you are still looking. But the reason for three months is that most graduates don't let you know when they find the employment. And then you are submitting stale CVS to companies, which is frustrating for the company, because once they contact the graduate, the person then says, no, I have found employment. So it's frustrating to send out old CVS to a company and it's not a good reflection on the institution because people are going to say, no, that's the ideal. That's what the ideal is. It doesn't always happen, but that's the intention of why only for three months at a time.

[00:05:59.390] - Speaker 1

Okay, so if the student has graduated for longer period of time, what happens then.

[00:06:14.430] - Speaker 2

Based on the student's qualification? So let's say the student graduated in, let's say, 20. We're now talking now precover or, you know, I know that a lot of students have had issues not finding employment during culvert. So if it is an ideal situation so we're looking at the student graduated in 2020, he's an It student, he completed his qualification and he got an entry level position at, I don't know, let's say dimension data, for example, and it is related to his qualification. And now the student submits the CV to me two years down the road and says, I'm looking for another job. My response to the graduate would be, unfortunately, by now you should have sufficient employment to find a different position on your own. If a student, like I said, graduated in 2019 and hasn't really found any meaningful employment, I would still consider keeping that CV because the time that we're living in now, it was a bit difficult. Let's say not lots of companies were employing students. But if the student. Let's say. Graduated in 2017. For example. And is now coming to me and saying. Look. I'm looking for a job.

[00:07:50.250] - Speaker 2

I would ideally not be able to keep this even because the graduate recruitment program is aimed at recent unemployed graduates. So it is within the last year. But it's not a hard and fast at all. It also depends on the situation of the student. Or let's say, for example, the student graduated their first qualification and is now busy studying again. So they're busy with maybe an advanced diploma. They graduated in 2018, but now they're currently busy with an advanced diploma, so they are upskilling themselves. So they will be a recent graduate again. And so then I would look at a CV like that because now they're entering the market with a different or an upskilled qualification. So that is something we would consider, but we cannot obviously have an open database for each and every CPT graduate because it would be unfair to the students who are recently graduated.

[00:08:58.450] - Speaker 1

Okay, thank you. I see there are some questions in the chat. It says, could you please repeat these two points? When the company needs people, I fold them via the department, then forward them to the companies and then write down students details on paper. So I think they just want you to repeat that process.

[00:09:25.070] - Speaker 2

Okay, thanks. Yes, thanks, Primar. Because unfortunately, for some reason, can't see the trap on this particular meeting. So what happens is, to clarify that, let's say we work with it. Students, you are graduates, so you submit your CV to me for employment opportunities, you will receive an acknowledgement email from me where I would have acknowledged receiving your CV. What I then do is I go and I saved.